Department of Medicine

Donald W. Landry, MD, PhD
Interim Chair

The Department has been committed to excellence in teaching, research, and patient care since its founding as part of Kings College (later Columbia University) in 1767. We are a diverse department with thirteen divisions. We maintain a dedicated and outstanding faculty of over 1300 physicians and scientists, train an outstanding housestaff of about 200 (including research fellows and students), and retain a support staff of approximately 350. We are the largest clinical department in the College of Physicians & Surgeons, with a budget close to $130 million.

The Department of Medicine clinicians, some in private practice and some not, see patients across much of the State. Our physicians provide primary and subspecialty diagnostic and health care services to the community. Through knowledge and through training in general medicine and its specialties, we are committed to fighting disease and providing quality care to our patients.

We specialize in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases affecting the internal organs. The conditions we treat range from heart disease to diabetes to allergies and autoimmune diseases like arthritis and lupus, covering the entire human body. Our physicians are also researchers who work together to address the complex medical problems they face each day.
