Department of Radiology

Ronald L. Van Heertum, M.D.
Professor of Radiology and Interim Chair

The Department of Radiology at Columbia University provides patient services in multiple locations: Columbia University Medical Center, Columbia-Presbyterian Eastside Radiology, the Kreitchman PET Center, and the Cerebrovascular Center.

Columbia-Presbyterian Eastside Radiology

Columbia-Presbyterian Eastside Radiology is a faculty practice of Columbia University College of Physicians & Surgeons in New York City. CPER offers state-of-the-art imaging services:

- Magnetic Resonance Imaging
- Magnetic Resonance Angiography
- CT scans including Lung Screening & Coronary Artery Scoring
- CT Angiogram (CTA)
- CT Three-Dimensional Reconstruction Studies
- Dentascan
- Digital Mammography
- Bone Densitometry
- Ultrasound
- Nuclear Medicine/SPECT
- General Radiology/Digital Fluoroscopy
- Myelography

Patient Services Include:

- I.V. sedation upon request
- Immediate readings available for your referring physician
- Film delivery upon request

Kreitchman PET Center

An American College of Radiology-accredited facility, the Morton A. Kreitchman Positron Emission Tomography (PET) Center of Columbia University College of Physicians & Surgeons is one of the nations foremost clinical and research PET and PET/CT facilities.

A powerful, versatile imaging tool, PET provides valuable diagnostic information for neurology, cardiology, and oncology. PET scans display color-coded images of the body's metabolic and chemical processes. Since virtually all diseases alter body chemistry, PET can often provide answers that cannot be reached using other imaging techniques. For example, by highlighting how cancer cells consume resources, PET can reveal cancer before structural changes appear with MRI.
